

Three generations of one family employed at Heat Trace Limited

Heat Trace Limited (HTL) a family run company founded in 1974, is pleased to announce that from April 2015 they will give full time employment to Connor Hignett, a third generation member of the Hignett family currently employed by the company.

After working for several months on a temporary basis at HTL, Connor will be working in the same factory as his father, Ian Hignett and grandfather, Dave Hignett. Chairman and owner of the company Neil Malone says, "This is another first at Heat Trace - three generations of the same family. A tremendous achievement - I look forward to welcoming Connor's children into the Heat Trace family in 20 years' time!"

Both Dave and Ian work on the extrusion lines. Having over forty years of experience in the cabling industry, Dave has worked for ten years at Heat Trace. Ian has twenty years of experience in the industry and has worked at Heat Trace for eight years. Dave and Ian are both delighted to be the first family to have three generations being employed at Heat Trace and are proud to have Connor follow in their footsteps. Formally working at Nando's, one could say Connor has moved from catering to cabling. Currently working in the Packing and Dispatch Department at HTL, Connor says, "I like the way the company is family orientated and encourages a friendly family atmosphere."
